thing whiter than its foam! It tossed about a froth of golden hair, that shone for an instant, and vanished.

And through all the white horror of their faces, through all the shock and the grief, was the one thought—Agatha was out of the way!

A week later there was a new grave in the churchyard and a new mistress at Sea View.

One who well became the position, thought Robert Fielding, as he entered the drawing-room and saw her in her deep mourning robes, which only enhanced her superb beauty. She met him with a sweet, cold courtesy. He had meant to take her in his arms and kiss her. Why did he not? What fee, terrible, barrier stood him out

"I thought, dear, that perhaps you would name our wedding day," he said.

"Our wedding day," and she lifted her laughing eyebrows. "Did you think I meant to marry you?"

"Juliette!" he began.

She stayed the tide of his passion by her
